Cambridge Policeman Say Pay Fairer Less Than Building Trades

Cambridge Police Benevolent Union calls City Council meeting, attacks police departments in New York and Boston.

John L. Nolan, secretary of the Cambridge Police Benevolent Union, told the City Council meeting on Monday that police departments in New York and Boston were paying police officers a fairer less than the Cambridge Police Department.

He pointed out that building janitors average $40 a week, while police officers in New York and Boston receive $50 a week. Nolan urged the council to consider establishing a institute of police affairs at the University of Cambridge to study the organization of police forces and their efficiency.

The council adjourned without taking any action on the matter.
